

Cars, Pedestrians & Regina's "Bicycle-Only" Lanes

Some downtown Regina streets have blocks with "bicycle-only" lanes. Although the paint is getting faint in places, they are marked by a solid white line and a bicycle symbol. They may also have the words "bicycles only" painted in them. Your experience riding in these lanes has probably alerted you to the fact that many, many drivers are confused as to what "bicycles only" means. Here's a review of the rules for cars.

- Cars are not allowed to enter the "bicycle-only" lane except to make a right hand turn at the next available intersection.
- When turning right, cars should not enter the bicycle-only lane until the solid white line turns into a broken white line near the intersection.
- Cars may enter the lane to park, or to cross into an alley or parking lot
- Cars are not allowed to cross an intersection in a "bicycles-only" lane.
- Pedestrians are not allowed to use a bicycle-only lane for walking, jogging or running.
